

Faculty Guide to Addressing Disruptive Behaviour

McMaster University is a community dedicated to furthering learning, intellectual inquiry, the dissemination of knowledge and personal and professional development. Membership in this community implies acceptance of the principle of mutual respect for the rights, responsibilities, dignity and well-being of others and a readiness to support an environment conducive to the intellectual and personal growth of all who study, work and live within it.

All students, staff and faculty members of McMaster University have the right to learn, work and live free from intimidation and harassment. Each member of the McMaster community has a responsibility to promote and maintain an environment that is welcoming and secure for everyone and to be familiar with the regulations outlined in the Student Code of Conduct (SCC).

Judicial Affairs: Community Living at MAC

Judicial Affairs helps to achieve and enhance an ethical campus community at McMaster by addressing behavioural expectations for student civility and personal conduct. We work with the other departments in Student Affairs as well as student groups and the broader University community to help educate McMaster students through the development of campus community standards and the implementation of a fair and efficient judicial process.

While it is expected that most student behaviour can be handled using common classroom management techniques, repeated or more severe instances might fall under the SCC.

The SCC defines disruptive behaviour as “behaviour in class or out of class, which for any reason disrupts the class work of others, involves substantial disorder, invades the rights of others and/or disrupts the operation of the University.”

Examples of disruptive or unacceptable behaviour:

- Repeated incidents of loud and persistent socializing during class/lecture.
- Excessive and continued cell phone or pager noise during class/lecture, in libraries or in designated quiet areas.
- Physically threatening or using derogatory language towards any students, staff or faculty members.
- Inappropriate and repeated emails or e-harassment.
- Destructive behaviour towards property belonging to the University or to any students, staff or faculty members.
- Misconduct resulting from drug or alcohol use.
- Harassment of any kind (sexual, racial, bullying, etc.).

Helpful tips for avoiding disruptive behaviour:

- Model the good behaviour expected from students.
- Be courteous, fair and sensitive to the various needs of students, staff and faculty members.
- Develop rapport with students when possible and appropriate.
- Set reasonable expectations, clearly outlined and explained.
- Show confidence in your actions and enforce all decisions.
- Be fair and consistent when addressing disruptive behaviour.

If you feel as though your personal safety and/or the personal safety of others might be in immediate danger, contact McMaster Security Services by dialing “88” or ext. 24281 from any University phone.

How to address disruptive behaviour in class:

- Do not take the situation personally. Maintain a reaction that is calm and not overly emotional or rash—be firm but fair.
- Make direct eye contact with the disruptive student.
- Direct a question towards someone near the disruptive student in order to attract attention to that area of the class or physically move towards the area.
- Address the problem behaviour in class in a general way (i.e. “Just a reminder that people who speak while someone else is addressing the class will be asked to leave.”).
- If the student continues to disrupt and you do not wish to ask him/her to leave, request that he/she meet you during your office hours to discuss the incident and what consequences the student might face if the behaviour does not stop.
- If minor disruptive behaviour should escalate and become serious, the instructor can require the student to leave the classroom and can employ Security Services to assist if necessary.
- As soon as possible, report the behaviour to your chair.
- Document the dates, times and locations of incidents and meetings and consult the Associate Dean of your Faculty for advice. Additionally, you are encouraged to consult the departments and services listed under the “Who to Contact” heading of this pamphlet.
- If a student behaviour is related to a disability, the instructor and the student should work with Student Affairs and the Centre for Student Development to accommodate the student without further disrupting the class.

How to make a complaint or file an incident under the Student Code of Conduct:

Contact Judicial Affairs by phone at ext. 27455 or via email at studentcode@mcmaster.ca.

There are several possible outcomes when someone files a complaint.

- You may discuss the case and brainstorm possible ideas on how to handle your current situation.
- An investigation may begin and the student may be called in for a meeting to get their perspective.
- Students may then receive sanctions which are intended to remedy the situation, promote community standards and to warn of possible consequences should inappropriate behaviour continue; this is what is referred to as informal action under the SCC.
- A formal Hearing may be required to rectify a situation. This is often the case for serious or repeat offences under the code. If this does happen, you may be interviewed further, be asked to provide a statement or, in rare cases, to attend a Hearing.

The SCC is intended, particularly in the first instance, to be educational in nature; therefore, it is especially important that cases of misconduct be reported as soon as they occur so that they may be addressed promptly.

Incidents of violence, harassment and ongoing disruption, even after measures to correct or rectify the situation have been taken by faculty, should always be referred to Student Affairs.
